The matter was settled yesterday.

"She, too, remembers and regrets," I thought; "perhaps she could forgive."

Alas, if we two could but have been alone at that moment! But close beside her was the pale, stern face of her father and the determined one of her mother; those two had, from the very

A mutual friend arranged the details of the matter: I was to spend the night in the house, and the next morning Babette, my only child, would be allowed to come and breakfast with me. At 3 o'clock I was to leave; at 4 Helen would come to take away her belongings; and twenty-tour hours the house would be "To Let," a party of workmen would come and put it in order for the next tenant, and then it would be left, empty and desolate, an image of my life.

I stopped in the midst of my packing to order a breakfast such as would please my little Babette; I held a consultation with Lucas, my old servant, and we chose those dishes that the child was fond of. I also put aside for her two little trinkets, a pretty porte bonheur and a locket containing my own likeness.

Poor little Babette! She was blessed with the happy ignorance of a child of seven, and yet she was precocious enough to understand, in her own way, that there was something serious the matter between "papa" and "mamman."

At 10 o'lock precisely she came, accompanied by my mother-in-law's maid, with the happy ignorance of a child of seven, and yet she was precocious enough to understand, in her own way, that there was something serious the matter between "papa" and "mamma."

At 10 o'clock precisely she came, accompanied by my mother-in-law's maid, who said she would return for mademoiselle at 2 in the afternoon.

Who can say where and how little girls acquire tact? They must be born with a germ of it, and, when developed, it makes them either women of the world, capable of reading one's secret thoughts, or else gentle, patient nurses for the sick and wounded. Babette asked me no questions, but kissed me rather gravely; sat on my knee before the fire, as was her custom, and, when I gave her the locket, pressed my likeness to her lips, and hung it round her neck, whispering:

"I will kiss it every morning and every night."

When we had finished breakfast, however, she said, abruptly;

"Do you know mamma's coming here at 4 o'clock?"

"Are you not going 'to wait and say goodby to her?" she asked, and after an instant's hesitation I said:

"I cannot. I have to leave the house at 3. The train will not wait for me."

"Why can't you take another train?" she persisted.

"Because—because I have promised to go by that train, and I must not break my word, you know."

Then, forgetting her presence, I added half aloud: "And yet, if I could but see her alone!"

Babette said nothing more, and while I continued my preparations for going away, she wandered all over the sient house collecting her playthings, coming back occasionally with a doll or a little box of treasures, and looking unusually serious.

Her behavior wounded my paternal love, for it seemed as if she were already pitation, pain in side, smothering, etc Fine book on "Nervous and Heart Dis-eases" free.
